Green Living: Reducing Waste

Cranking up your oven to cook dinner uses more energy than most other appliances in your home, especially if you have an electric range as opposed to gas. You can cut that energy usage by employing your smaller cooking appliances when cooking smaller meals. Instead of rewarming cold pizza in the oven, use your toaster oven. For other small meals, your microwave or electric grill will use much less energy than your oven.

September Offers!

Thoughts from Richard Steed

September's here and that means the pre-20 crowd is back to school. When they return to school it somehow seems the rest of us return to our normal lives. Vacation days are over. Households stabilize. People return to their regular habits, spaces, and routines.

There's something very reassuring about a stable routine, even as it underlies what many refer to as "the daily grind." You know what today will look like; what the day will bring. You know who you'll be surrounded by and that if the unexpected should happen, you and those around you will work together to get through it. That's our goal every day as we serve you. We want to be a stable resource—habitually and routinely responding to your information asset needs and requirements.

If you need us, we're there. If you have a pressing matter, we respond quickly. In those moments when things get completely crazy or out of control in your world, we will confidently support you and be ready to act at a moment's notice.

Kind of reminds me of a great butler. Quietly ready for whatever his employer will need at any given moment . . . but also maintaining the everyday necessities. That's us. Your information assets butler. Yeah, that sounds good.

You rang?

Have a great September!

Richard

Quick Tips: Organizing

At your hardware or auto supply store, you can purchase magnetic parts holders—shallow metal bowls magnetized to hold small metal parts. These are great for pins, paper clips, hair clips, bobby pins, tacks, push pins, spare screws and more. To give them some style, simply paint them in your favorite color!

"If we attend continually and promptly to the little that we can do, we shall ere long be surprised to find how little remains that we cannot do."

Six Saving Tips for College Students

Saving money as a broke college student can be tough. There are some easy ways to save though, with just a little thought and effort. Start with these ideas to build a savings account the slow and steady way.

1. Instead of using a local bank, join a credit union. You will usually have access to services for free or at reduced rates. If you don't have a credit union nearby, ask for student discounts at your bank.

2. Track your spending to see where your money goes. While students often are very busy with school, work, and social activities, taking just a little time to monitor your spending can go a long way. Even just a simple notebook will work, but there are also many apps and programs available to make tracking your spending quick and easy.

3. Avoid non-academic debt if possible. It is best to develop a mindset that student loan money is to pay for school-related and living expenses only. Using student loans to buy an Xbox or a new skateboard will only hurt you in the future. If you have a credit card, try to pay it off each month so that you don't graduate with even more debt.

4. Cut your expenses where you can. Buying used textbooks is easy to do, but also consider buying other necessities used. Visit local thrift stores or check Craigslist to find used clothing, bikes, and other needs.

5. Take advantage of your student discount. Many retailers and entertainment venues offer discounts if you show your student ID. Even better, see what free activities are offered on campus. You'll often be able to fill up your social calendar with these events without spending a dime.

6. Consider who you are hanging with. Having lots of friends who are big spenders can be a drain on your wallet. These can be kids with wealthy parents, but may also be friends who are headed down the road to financial trouble themselves. Studies show that we are extremely influenced by the behavior of those around us. So if you cannot afford to spend like the rest of your social circle, be open to making new friends who can support you in your quest for financial freedom.

Don't Wash That Chicken!

Bacteria on raw poultry can cause illness when that bacteria cross-contaminates other food or surfaces. Many people believe that washing chicken before cooking can reduce this risk. But experts are calling for an end to poultry washing.

Washing chicken or turkey can cause water droplets to splash off the raw meat. Tests show that even just a few of these droplets contain enough bacteria to infect a person. While most people practice good food safety by washing their hands and preparation surfaces after contact with poultry, few realize the danger from simply washing it.

There is no benefit to washing poultry, as the only way to eliminate the risk of bacterial contamination is to properly cook it. Poultry should be cooked to a minimum internal temperature of 165 degrees F (74 degrees C). Doing this, rather than washing before cooking, is the best strategy to safely prepare poultry for your family.

Quick Tips: Money

Think twice before taking advantage of a credit card company's offer to skip a payment. In almost all cases, the interest will still accrue, meaning that you will owe more on your balance by skipping a payment.

The Capital One Breach: How to Keep Your Data Safe

Just when you thought data breaches couldn't get any worse, another one has hit a major US company: Capital One. In July, the financial services provider announced that over 100 million customers had their social security and bank account information stolen. In the breach's wake, additional details have emerged; more than 30 companies are believed to have their data stolen.

If your business has a corporate bank account with Capital One, check your statement for discrepancies. Immediately report any suspected fraud. Capital One breach-related scams are likely, so make sure your employees know how to spot phishing and hacking attacks. Always verify email addresses for authenticity before downloading attachments and clicking on embedded links. Employee-issued devices should have virus and malware detection software installed on them.

Since your corporate cloud applications may be at risk, monitor them for suspicious activity. Implementing an offline backup solution is a great way to add an extra layer of protection to your cloud data. Data backed up to a portable data storage device is better protected from malicious attacks. Store your offline backups offsite for protection from disasters and attacks.

As with any major data breach, expect more fallout from the Capital One breach in the coming weeks and months. Stay vigilant and be proactive.
